Introducing the EMFA

This session will provide a general introduction to the EMFA and will explain its relevance for the attendees of the training:

- A regulation with a twist
- Context of adoption, timing and implementation
- Main objectives and scope of application
- General structure
- Articulation with other laws

Rules to safeguard transparency and editorial independence of media services, including of public service media

The EMFA introduces for the first time at the EU level rules on transparency of media ownership and new safeguards against public interference, including specific rules in relation to public service media (PSM) and to protect journalists:

- Transparency of media ownership
- Editorial freedom and safety of journalists
- Rules to ensure that PSM function in an independent manner

Rules to safeguard MSPs in the digital environment

This session will explain the new media privilege which will allow certain media service providers to be protected when the very large online platforms remove or demote their content.

New rights for citizens

The EMFA introduces two new rights for recipients of media services:

- A right to have access to a plurality of editorial independent media content
- A right to customise their media offer

This session will discuss these two rights and some of the enforcement issues that may arise in practice.

State advertising and audience measurement

The EMFA introduces rules to ensure that “economic resources” are allocated in a transparent and fair manner. New rules are introduced on:

- Audience measurement systems
- State advertising

Institutional changes

The EMFA introduces institutional changes to the oversight of media services. In particular, it introduces a new European Board for Media Services (EMBS), which will replace ERGA, the European Regulators Group for Audiovisual Services. This session will focus on:

- Tasks for EMBS
- Structured cooperation
- Coordination of measures concerning services from outside the EU
- The enforcement of obligations of video sharing platforms
- Media mergers

General appraisal session

The last session of the training will provide an opportunity for participants to discuss in a structured manner (in breakout sessions) the pros and cons of the new legislation and what difficulties they think they may face when putting it into application.
